Climate Education Otherwise

Holding Space in times of crisis

“Driven by expansion, colonialism, and resource extraction and propelled by neoliberalism and rabid consumption our world is profoundly out of balance.

We take more than we give: we inoculate ourselves in positive self-regard while continuing to make harmful choices; we wreak irreparable havoc on the ecosystems, habitats, and beings with whom we coexist.

But instead of drowning in hopelessness, how can we learn to face our reality with humility and accountability? ”

TAKEN FROM HOSPICING MODERNITY BY VANESSA ANDREOTTI

This is an invitation and exploration, a quest on how to

- expand our capacity to deal with uncertainty, discomfort, complexity and failure
- create space for grief and pain within ourselves and others
- interrupt satisfaction with modern-colonial desires that are harmful
- stay with the trouble without falling into traps of desperate hope or desolate hopelessness

This is also an educational experiment and an (un)learning space that we open up together. Come as you are. We'll do the same, and we start from here together.

your hosts, the lalelu-collective

We are Laura, Leon and Luis:
with three completely different backgrounds, skills and humors. We were brought together through the work of the Gesturing Towards Decolonial Futures Collective by simply chance, or was it fate?
Since then we are collaborating, joined trainings, protests, conferences, went into despair and out of despair together.
We feel in our hearts and our bones that “another world is not only possible... she’s on her way.”*
At the same time, we sense how our world is deeply out of balance - and maybe it is another end of the world we must prepare and long for.
